There is no one on the planet that flies on commercial aircraft that is so important that they need to be on a cell phone during their flight. The airlines could have a phone near the restrooms and charge large sums for its use. That would determine how important a call is. I would like to know who came up this inane idea. Crying babies is bad enough, insensitive self appointed 'big shots' would be enough for me to really not want to fly. Look at all the morons that can't drive their cars [big safety concern] without a phone held up to their ear. They are too lazy [stupid] to even use a hands free set. PLEASE, do not allow this to happen. Thank you for allowing this opportunity to comment.
Have a Happy Easter!
